

THE JOURNAL OF CLINICAL ETHICS

Double-Blinded Peer Review

The majority of articles published in The Journal of Clinical Ethics are subject to double-blinded peer review: that is, manuscripts are reviewed by experts who do so without remuneration. Some reviewers are members of the editorial board of JCE. Members of the editorial board receive a complimentary print subscription to the journal and no other compensation.

Double-blinded indicates that reviewers do not know the names of authors, and authors do not know the names of reviewers. The names of authors and reviewers are known to the managing editor; manuscripts are assigned a number, and their progress through the peer-review process is tracked using this number. Unless a reviewer gives the managing editor permission, the reviewer's identity will not be revealed to an author or to anyone else.

Reviewers' comments may be sent to other reviewers of the same manuscript, and reviewers may be notified of the editors' decision regarding the publication of a manuscript.

Reviewers must disclose to the managing editor any conflict of interest that could bias their opinion of a manuscript, and should disqualify themselves from reviewing a manuscript when appropriate. Reviewers should not use knowledge of a work before publication to further their own interest.

Some articles are invited by the editors, and, as a result, are not subject to blinded peer review; instead, the manuscripts are reviewed by the editors.

The double-blinded peer-review process typically takes eight to 12 weeks. At the end of this time, authors will receive notice regarding the status of their manuscript. Typically, a decision will be one of the following:

- Accepted for publication as submitted.
- Accepted for publication pending minor revision by the author(s) as recommended by the reviewers.
- The reviewers have recommended major revision of the manuscript before it is considered for publication; the revised manuscript will re-enter the review process after the major revision is completed; when possible, the original reviewers will review the revised manuscript.
- Not accepted for publication.

The editors may accept or reject a manuscript according to its suitability for and the needs of the journal.
